Excerpt from Review of the Organization and Transactions of the Customs Receivership of Santo Domingo During the First Year of Its Operation, April 1, 1905-March 31, 1906: With Collateral Exhibits and Remarks The customs receivership of Santo Domingo was organized at the request of the Dominican Republic for the combined purposes of securing the maintenance of the national independence, removing the incentive to internal revolution, and to protect creditors, collect revenues, and segregate funds for the payment of debts. That it has accomplished its financial undertaking during the first year of its operations is shown by the fact that more revenue was actually collected in cash than has been reported as having been collected during any of the preceding years in the history of the country, when not only cash but scrip and other evidences of indebtedness were received in payment of customs dues, and when importations were stimulated by reason of the fact that creditors were only able to collect through orders upon custom-houses, which they sold at a discount, thus lowering the duty to the purchaser and importer. although the customs...
